Introduction

Topless Dancers are among the most beautiful, interesting, intelligent (despite belief otherwise) and exciting women in America. The Topless bar industry is a huge cash industry. Men flock to these clubs to drink, socialize and fantasize. Among them are those whose greatest desire is to attain the “big score” with the dancer of their dreams. I was a customer, a doorman and a manager of a club for over a decade. I’ve been a friend, boss, coworker and yes, lover to hundreds of women who chose this profession. This book is my account of the secrets I acquired and used to befriend, enjoy the companionship of and even get involved with many topless dancers.

The Topless Bar Industry

The first thing you need to understand about the Topless Bar Industry is where its biggest source of revenue comes from. Topless Bars make their money by appealing to the loneliness of single men or married men who aren’t happy. Bottom Line. The one thing people seem to hate more than anything is being lonely. People need interaction with other people. Not only do they crave interaction, but also they crave affection, attention, and yes, sex. The Topless bar industry understands this well and presents the lonely man with a temporary fix to this problem. In the mean time they sell him drinks, food, dances, merchandise and games (pool tables, etc.) So I bet you’re thinking, “OK, but what does that have to do with me hooking up with a dancer.” The answer is everything. To immediately stand out from the “CUSTOMERS” of a Topless bar, the first thing you have to do is not act like their target customer.

Strategies that have worked for me

Strategy One

The first time I scored with a dancer, it was so easy it was almost disillusioning. I was in my early twenties. I had been to two clubs that night with not much excitement to be found. I decided to just go for a beer at a little dive to finish the night. When I got in, I saw the bar was all but empty. The owner was behind the bar doing dishes. One dancer (and a really cute one) was on the runway. Only two customers were there, all the way in the back playing pool. So I came in and took a seat at the first stool at the bar. Ordered a small pitcher of beer and lit a cigarette. I glanced over, glanced not glared mind you, at the dancer on the runway. She was young and sweet with long light brown hair and blue eyes. I got up from my stool, and walked over to the runway...laid a dollar down. She smiled and came over. We started a dialogue, and this is what I said. "How's it going? Pretty quiet in here. I just stopped off for a beer. I'm heading up to the metal bar up the road. What time do you get off? Would you like to come?"

Now let's analyze what I said.

- First I noted how slow it was.
- Second I disarmed the customer perception (I just stopped off for a beer) I showed the way to more fun (I'm heading up to the metal bar up the road) and I gave her an option (Would you like to come?)

What this all boils down to when you read between the lines is:

"Hey, I'm not a loser that hangs out in these places, I was thirsty and didn't want to wait till I got farther up the road. I'm sure you aren't making much money tonight...so maybe I can at least offer you a little free entertainment in a safe environment so we can get to know each other."

So do you want to know how it turned out? I bet you do. Ok, I'll tell you.

She replied to my response with something like this: "I get off in about half an hour. I really don't feel like going to the club, but if you'd like to join me for breakfast we could do that." Positive response. Why? Because I went up and talked to her with confidence. I talked to her like I'd known her for a long time. Because I was non-committal and didn't seem to care if she wanted to hang out or not.

Ok, so now you're wondering, yeah but did you score. The answer is not nearly as expected. We did in fact go to the breakfast place and eat. We talked and established rapport. This after she bought me another pitcher of beer to bide my time while she finished work. I picked up the tab for breakfast. Now, she wanted to party a little after eating, but the bars were closed and she had to check on her daughter at home. So she asked me to follow her to her place, let her run in, then we went to my place.

Once she was at my place, we had a few drinks, talked more and I brought out this deck of tarot cards I had. She expressed interest and asked me if I could read them. I said yes and of course she wanted me to read her cards. I had her shuffle them, laid them out and told her I saw a guy in her life that was causing problems. I told her she had some hurt over it. Then I told her there was a new guy in her present or near future that made all the difference. I didn't tell her what he looked like, who he was or if she had met him yet. Then she asked me if I wanted to stop by the next morning to eat. I of course said yes. She gave me her number and I gave her mine. She left for the evening. Next morning I went to her place and ate. I hung out for a while and then left. I didn't see her or hear from her for two months after that. My life went on. Then one day she called me and asked me if I would help her with installing a linoleum floor. She offered lunch and some beers and I accepted. I helped her install the floor. We started hanging out a lot more after that. I never made any move on her at all. One day, after a few weeks of hanging out, I went with her to a costume designer's house. We were in my car and we started talking about relationships. She had a boyfriend at the time. I said that at that stage of my life,

I didn't want anything serious but that I liked to have what I called intimate friends. She went to get her costumes. I dropped the subject. Later that evening, I took her by her mother's house. On the way home she turned to me and asked, " Haven't you ever thought about kissing me?" I replied, "Yeah I guess maybe once or twice." About two blocks later I pulled over and laid one on her. When we got back to her place, she told her boyfriend that she needed to go tan. I left before her and within a half an hour, she was in my bedroom. SCORE!
